

How Cows do jump over the Moon

Reg Down
© Copyright 2014

All rights reserved. No part of this publication, in part or in whole may be reproduced, transmitted or utilized in any form, without the permission of the author, except for brief quotations in critical articles and reviews.

“Silly Willy, Silly Willy,” said Peekaboo, “how do cows jump over the moon?”
“They don’t,” said Silly Willy. “They fly.”

“They fly?!” exclaimed Peekaboo. “How do they fly?”

“Oh, that’s hard to say,” said Silly Willy.

“Please tell me,” said Peekaboo.

“It’s complicated,” said Silly Willy.

“Please, please, please,” said Peekaboo.

“It’s like this,” said Silly Willy. “When a cow wants to fly over the moon she drinks coffee.”

“Drinks coffee!” exclaimed Peekaboo.

“Yes,” said Silly Willy. “She drinks a whole bucketful.”

“Then what?” said Peekaboo.

“Then her tail starts turning round and round like a propeller and off she flies over the moon,” said Silly Willy.

“Oh,” said Peekaboo. “I never thought of that ... but how does she land?”

“That’s easy,” said Silly Willy. “She comes down head first.”

“Head first!” exclaimed Peekaboo. “Wouldn’t that hurt?”

“Don’t be silly,” said Silly Willy. “Her tail going round and round turns her into a helicopter and she lands very softly.”